As more and more people become aware of these benefits, the demand for music education is increasing.

Secondly, music schools are becoming more accessible to people of all ages and backgrounds. This has led to a renewed interest in music and a desire to learn more about it, which has in turn fueled the growth of music schools. Moreover, music schools also offer opportunities for students to perform in front of an audience, which can be a powerful motivator for continued learning and improvement.

The Musicworks Franchise has developed a distinctive teaching approach that concentrates on early childhood development through music, as well as academic achievement through music-centered learning. The efficacy of this method has been demonstrated by the success of numerous students.

The founder of Musicworks Canada, Taeho Style, established the academy to fill a gap in the music lesson market that primarily comprised of "hobby learning" and a strictly academic approach. He wanted to create a place where musical fundamentals and enjoyment held equal importance, a balance that was missing in the market at that time. Musicworks Canada's success during the Coronavirus pandemic fueled its expansion to become a franchise, allowing Taeho to offer a successful business structure to individuals in the lower to middle class who would not have the opportunity to own a business otherwise.

Musicworks Canada has maintained its success by upholding a unique culture built on integrity, quality, community, relationship, and growth. Its vision is to be the world's biggest and most loved music-centered
